Major points of the day:

Today was the first official day of exploring local NGOs. This morning, I spent some time researching organizations working on issues I care about. After reading through websites and mission statements, I came up with a few to contact.

In the afternoon, I took a leap and contacted the top organization on my list. To my surprise, the president himself answered the phone! He was incredibly welcoming and happy to chat about their work. We talked for a while about the specific areas they focus on and the significance of their programs for the community. It turns out, he himself grew in this way village! After some education outside ~~educat~~ India and years in the corporate, he decided to return and give back. I couldn't help but feel inspired by his dedication and passion.

The conversation ended with an invitation to visit their office this evening for a more in-depth discussion.

It's already shaping up to be a fascinating week!
