Major points of the day:

Day two began with an unexpected adventure! I ventured on trip for the supplies with the NGOs president. Instead of the main road, we made up our way through an old trail leading up to the cantonment market that is still used by the locals. It was bit of a hike, but the path was beautiful, winding through thick trees and offering glimpses of hidden streams. The highlight of the journey was definitely the return trip. Just as I was nearing the outskirts, the sky exploded with a vibrant sunset. The last rays of light filtered through the leaves, casting long shadows and painting the whole sky in warm hues. It was breathtaking! And to top it all off, a friendly stray dog decided to tag along for the final stretch, keeping us company all the way back.

While I might be a little sore from the high hike, it was definitely worth it. The fresh air, the stunning scenery and unexpected canine companion made for a truly memorable experience. Now, prepped with supplies and a head full of beautiful memories, I'm ready to dive super into the work of local NGOs.
