Major points of the day:

Today brought a sobering look at infrastructure. A road widening project, meant to ease traffic, displaced families and businesses. The promised compensation was delayed and deemed insufficient by the people, leaving them struggling. This exposed the dangers of poorly planned development, emphasizing the need for community involvement and fair compensation.

Beyond displacement, villagers fear land grabs by wealthy outsiders for luxury resorts. This threatens the delicate mountain ecosystem and their way of life.

This day painted a complex picture. Infrastructure can bring progress, but it can also disrupt lives and environment. Striking a balance between development, environmental protection and fair treatment for impacted communities is crucial. Only through open communication and responsible planning can a sustainable future be built.
