Major points of the day:

Collaboration & Community Building.

Accompanying the NGO president, I volunteered to a nearby school operated by a organization headed by an retired military man. On the way I was introduced to a Russian Mother-daughter who were also volunteering. They explained their desire to give back to the community by providing supplies to them.

The highlight of the day was definitely the impromptu art session we organized. With a mix of volunteers, children and a language barrier bridged through laughter and smiles reminded me of the simple joys of life.

The children's enthusiasm and creativity were infectious, reminding me of the simple joys of life.

The experience underscored the importance of community building and the power of shared experiences fostering connections across cultures.

Witnessing the retired soldier's dedication to his community and the unexpected collaboration with the foreign visitors reaffirmed my belief in the power of collaboration and individual initiatives in creating positive change. It's clear that even small actions can have a significant impact, especially in the lives of these young students.
